

Ernesto Zedillo on globalization, NAFTA and the wall

David Dollar

Brookings, Monday, March 18, 2019

Ernesto Zedillo, former president of Mexico and now director of the Yale Center for the Study of Globalization, talks with David Dollar about the importance of globalization for developing countries, the erosion of multilateralism, NAFTA and its proposed replacement—the USMCA—and other issues on trade. Dollar also asks Zedillo whether President Trump’s push to build a border wall between the U.S. and Mexico is damaging the bilateral relationship.

Related content:

Wendy Cutler on how to enforce a US-China trade deal

Janet Yellen on monetary policy, currencies, and manipulation

Trade issues for the new Congress and the 2020 election

Subscribe to Brookings podcasts here or on Apple Podcasts, send feedback email to BCP@Brookings.edu, and follow us and tweet us at @policypodcasts on Twitter.

Dollar and Sense is a part of the Brookings Podcast Network.